

PROJECT 02: Genre Reflections

Cole Dorman

Watch a sci-fi/cyberpunk/steampunk film of your choice.

Chosen show: Cyberpunk Edgerunners

Make a short video addressing the following points:

- What about the film would lend itself to being expanded into a video game?
 - The cyberware that David has that lets him effectively pause time is something that could easily be a game mechanic that an entire game could revolve around.
 - The over capitalization of everything. Often in games as a way to create artificial progression there are systems like perks, upgrades or whatnot. In cyberpunk, everything has been commodified. So quite literally anything now costs money.
- What could only exist within the context of being a movie?
 - Probably the romance between David and Lucy, even with a lot of scripted events or cutscenes it would be far more challenging to allow the player a sense of agency and control and still pace it as well as its done in Cyberpunk Edgerunners.
- Do you recognize any influence that your chosen film may have had on any specific games?
 - There was quite literally an edgerunners update for Cyberpunk 2077 you can view here. Due to how well it was recieved it quite literally had a direct impact on the the game Cyberpunk 2077.
- Does the film influence the game Ironrise in any way?
 - I think the ideas of resistance and fighting against the system are present in both Cyberpunk and Ironrise, like with the posters, that will hopefully be implemented soon. I think the dystopian world of Ironrise shares a lot of the same influence, albiet not explictly directly influenced.

- How does the movie make you feel?
 - It was jarring, a lot of times I would start to like a character and they would be brutally killed shortly after.
- How does the movie comment on or acknowledge culture at large (the current mood/vibe of the world). This can either be during the time period in which the movie was created or present day.
 - One of the biggest examples is the lie of being able to escape the system despite David going to the Academy to climb out of poverty, he just ends up getting bullied for being poor and eventually dies fighting the corp he was trying to join by going to the academy.
- Feel free to add additional personal commentary/insights.
 - Ending was sad :(despite that I think thats why it hit so hard. Most shows/movies seem to constantly get extended and get worse and worse. They made something short and sweet.
